Disclaimer: I knew Bob Scott well for many years and was privileged to count him a friend. Bob was an accomplished writer. He published about a dozen books including one or two novels but remains best known for his wartime memoir GIMCP which was made into a movie (and embarrassed him for the liberties it took with fact.) But BTEE (aka Samburu Bull) is one of his best, an early 1950s account of big-game hunting in Tanganyika and Kenya. His powers of description are showcased not only in vivid descriptions of the topography and wildlife, but the motivation and emotions of a dedicated hunter. Like flying and combat, which he knew intimately, Scott describes the meritocracy of the bush. His growing admiration for and friendship with his African tracker, Gholo, provide another perspective even though they were largely unable to communicate verbally. Portions of the book contain deftly-crafted sequences in which ambition, dreams, and expectations overlap reality. The text is multi-tiered and lovingly written, as Bob Scott was one of those rare people who spent his life realizing his goals.
